Poetry following the 5 7 5 syllables rule:

A climbing gecko
It sticks and walks on the wall
Without any fear

Watching the ocean
While looking up at the sky
Seeing seagulls fly

Parrot in a tree
Looking up and looking down
It's a hiding place

Riding on the tracks
Speeding up to maximum
Just because it's fun

Powerfull tiger
Slowly sneaking through the grass
Seeking for a prey

The sun is shining
While I'm swimming in the sea
And drinking on land

It's beautifully
It's really beautifully
Those red rozen fields

The spring is over
Summer is now beginning
It's a lot hotter

A bird in it's nest
Trying to feed the small ones
While they're growing up

It's a rainy day
There's really nothing to do
Except poetry

A sailboat at rest
There's no wind to sail away
So it's resting time

A giant achor
To put a big boat at rest
When it's party time

Poetry not following the 5 7 5 syllables rule:
Winter poem

Winter is cold yet beauty lies underneath

every now and then Snowflakes descend from heaven dancing on a breeze creating white winter scapes

Some trees still green with their snowflake beds and white mountain tops their green twisted leaves protected from the cold still green through the freezing winds

When the water freezes, Frozen rivers perform crystallized views
Sometimes clear as glass the stars shine through

They are beautiful winters white ordeals

J2011 poetry

Pretty white pigeon
Bringing mail from town to town
Every once in a while

Jackdaws on the grass
Trying to find a snack
Like a piece of bread
